The Jefferson Room

President Jefferson selected these men to form the Orleans Legislative Council. This group of respected landowners eased the cultural transition of the Orleans Territory into an American representative democracy.

This state-of-the-art museum displays original artifacts and documents from the Destrehan family, and contains a touchscreen computer with over 600 images of Destrehan family documents.

Helvetia Slave Cabins

Donated to Destrehan Plantation by Entergy, these original cabins came from Helvetia Plantation which Hurricane Betsy destroyed in 1965. Used for educational purposes, one of the cabins depicts the living quarters of the enslaved with the other side displaying a cooper shop, workshop of Essex, an enslaved barrel maker on the plantation during the early 1800's.

The Education Center

Originally Caire-Graugnard overseer's cabin, this museum houses the 1811 Slave Revolt Exhibit. There is also a weaving room and a room containing artifacts from an archaeological dig done on site.

1811 SLAVE REVOLT

- On January 8, 1811, a slave revolt swept by Destrehan's Plantation. The insurrection began at the plantation of Manuel Andry and continued downriver, recruiting additional slaves as they headed towards New Orleans.
- By January 9th, word of the revolt reached down river plantations, and residents fled to Destrehan Plantation for safety.
- On January 10th, a detachment of troops under the command of General Wade Hampton encountered the revolutionaries at Fortier Plantation, present day Jefferson Parish City of Kenner.
- Judge Pierre Bauchet St. Martin appointed Jean Noel, one of three tribunals.
- Among the executed slaves, Gros and Petit Lindor, 30 years of age and Jasmin, 45 years of age, were from Destrehan's plantation.
